Re: S.B. 1714

Dear Senator Perry,

The Professional Certification Coalition (PCC) writes to share our views regarding S.B. 1714. We appreciate that the bill aims to advance the important goal of expanding opportunities for those with criminal conviction histories. However, S.B. 1714 could have an adverse effect on the health, safety, and welfare of Texas citizens who trust the state to protect the public from low-quality or harmful services. Therefore, the PCC must oppose S.B. 1714.

The PCC is a nonpartisan, nonprofit association formed to address legislation that affects professional certification programs, those who hold private certification credentials, and the many constituencies that rely on professional certification. The PCC's organizational members include non-governmental professional certification organizations, professional societies, and service providers. The PCC's members reflect a wide spectrum of professions, including health care, engineering, financial services, and information technology, among many others. Our founding organizations – the American Society of Association Executives (the leading organization for association management) and the Institute for Credentialing Excellence (the leading developer of accreditation standards for professional certification programs) – govern the PCC.

The PCC supports S.B. 1714's goal to broaden access to licensure for ex-offenders so they may earn a living in their chosen profession. We agree that simply having a criminal record should not stigmatize or automatically disqualify an individual from an occupational license. It is critical, however, that licensing boards be able to consider the facts underlying an applicant's past conduct and make independent, individual determinations about that applicant's fitness to practice the profession with the state's endorsement.

Not all professions are the same, nor are all criminal records. Some crimes, even if non-violent and non-sexual in nature, merit a continuing disqualification from certain professions. For example, if a health care professional has abused prescription privileges to run an opioid distribution ring or has engaged in identity theft of vulnerable patients while providing home health services, a licensure board should not be blocked from disqualifying that applicant for the protection of the public, nor should an employer be blocked from taking that into consideration.

Further, it is impossible to make an accurate and exhaustive list of relevant convictions for each licensed profession. Many prosecutions are resolved by plea bargains, often by converting the charged offense to a lesser and differently named offense, despite the offender's admission to the underlying conduct. The requirement that licensing agencies may consider disqualifying only an offense “on the list prepared by the licensing agency” will prevent licensing authorities from considering many directly relevant offenses. Most occupational licensing statutes do not list disqualifying felonies, leaving that to regulation or review by the licensing board. In addition, because an individual may have a relevant conviction record from a jurisdiction with a different taxonomy for criminal offenses, this approach necessarily will exclude relevant offenses that would have been considered potentially disqualifying if charged under Texas’ criminal code.

The public expects licensing authorities to serve as gatekeepers, as do private certification organizations. Private certification organizations in regulated professions rely on licensing boards to exercise their authority to deny licenses to individuals who have engaged in conduct that casts serious doubt on their fitness to practice the profession or indicates that the individual poses an unacceptable risk to the people to whom the applicant would interact in the conduct of the profession.

Most private certification organizations also rely on agency determinations in their own eligibility and ethics code enforcement, as they are non-governmental entities without the resources or legal authority to conduct full-fledged investigations, issue subpoenas, and hold trial-type proceedings. Withholding criminal conviction history from licensing boards therefore also has downstream effects on the information available to private certification organizations.

While the PCC stands ready to work with lawmakers who are seeking to craft legislation that strikes a reasonable balance between the benefits of occupational licensing and the desire for free markets in employment, this legislation goes too far in removing protections for the public.

Thank you for your consideration of these issues. If you have any questions regarding this letter, please feel free to reach out to us using the contact information identified below.
