Re: HB 794

Dear Representatives Capriglione and Bhojani:

The Professional Certification Coalition (PCC)¹ writes regarding HB 794. In its current form, HB 794 would incentivize individuals to challenge occupational licensing regulations, inviting administrative burden and expensive litigation. HB 794 could have an adverse effect on the health, safety, and welfare of Texas citizens who trust the state to protect the public from low-quality or harmful services and could also compel the state to expend taxpayer dollars unnecessarily. For these reasons, unless the bill is amended to remove Section 2.052, the PCC must oppose HB 794.

The PCC supports a careful review of licensure laws to ensure that unnecessary obstacles to professions are lightened or removed. However, HB 794 invites a burdensome petition process and costly litigation against government agencies by directly creating a private right of action for individuals to seek injunctions against licensure regulations. The PCC opposes these provisions of the bill for several reasons. First, the bill effectively shifts the burden of proof to the government in all cases, as any petitioner would be able to show that a regulation “burdens the entry into a profession or occupation.” By definition, all licensure laws do that.

Second, the government would bear the burden of proof in establishing that the challenged regulation is demonstrably applicable and necessary, fulfills a legitimate objective, and is the least restrictive regulation available for the safety and well-being of the citizens of Texas, according to the hierarchy of least restrictive to most restrictive listed in the bill. This hierarchy has not previously been a touchstone of occupational regulation in Texas, so no government agency will have data comparing the effects of regulation according to that hierarchy.

¹ The PCC is a nonprofit, nonpartisan association formed to address legislation that affects professional certification programs, those who hold private certification credentials, and the many constituencies that rely on professional certification. The PCC’s organizational members include non-governmental professional certification organizations, professional societies, and service providers. The PCC’s members reflect a wide spectrum of professions, including health care, engineering, financial services, and information technology, among many others. Our founding organizations – the American Society of Association Executives (the leading organization for association management) and the Institute for Credentialing Excellence (the leading developer of accreditation standards for professional certification programs) – govern the PCC.

Moreover, inviting costly litigation that the state would have to defend would waste limited state resources and taxpayer dollars. The threat and likelihood of litigation, and the cost burden of the resulting legal expenses, would create significant budgetary pressures on the state to eliminate occupational licensure wherever feasible, even when doing so would not be in the best interest of Texas citizens. With respect, the PCC suggests that the legislature and state agencies should instead take a leadership role in carefully considering whether any specific occupational licensure requirements may be unduly restrictive, rather than spurring litigation battles for judges to resolve.

The PCC stands ready to work with lawmakers who seek to craft legislation that strikes a reasonable balance between the benefits of occupational licensing and the desire for free markets in employment. Unfortunately, in its current form, this legislation goes too far in enabling removal of protections for the public.
